

- Check every offer: verify the identity of the individuals and organizations that offer transport, shelter and other services. Ask them a copy of their identity documents (and car plates).
- Collocate banners and posters at the crossings, advising refugees 1. not to travel with strangers, 2. verify the offerer's identity with border authorities, 3. how to get help if they need it.
- Together with the law enforcement authorities to strengthen child protection screenings at the border points, to better identify at-risk children.
- Improve cross-border collaboration and data exchange between NGOs, border control, law enforcement and child protection authorities in order to quickly identify and protect separated and unaccompanied children.
- Encourage and facilitate authorities to implement family tracing and reunification procedures for children, deprived of parental care.
- Implement additional risk screening in reception centres, shelters, train stations, and other locations where refugees are gathering or passing through.
- Encourage and help national and international law enforcement to monitor the movement of unaccompanied and separated minors and particularly vulnerable women.
- Report the cases of presumed recruitment for trafficking and exploitation to authorities, collaborate in the identification of offerers and actively mitigate the risks facing vulnerable groups.
